Plein Air Paintings Seamlessly Blend In With the Real Landscapes That Inspired Them

Painting en plein air, or “in the open air,” was first adopted by the French Impressionists in the 1800s. But, the tradition lives on today, and many contemporary realist artists around the world are still taking the great outdoors to paint. With a deep admiration for the natural world, Los Angeles-based artist Richard Oliver captures California's stunning landscapes in oil paint.

Rome in old colorized photos from the 1890s

Perhaps there's no other city in the world that's so rich in archeological digs, remnants and charm from the ancient days that today echoes between the buildings and structures brought by modernity. If there's a true word to describe Rome, it would be palimpsest. Just like the ancient manuscripts that were reused and altered to remove the old scribing to make room for some new writing, Rome is a city that has layer after layer after layer of remnants from its old days.
