10. Get Happy
11. Under the Boardwalk
12. I Can't Give You Anything But Love
13. I'm Glad There is You
14. I've Got the World on a String

Since the dawn of sound film in the 1920s, people have been misquoting movies. It's a common phenomenon, and one that has only become more prevalent with the rise of the internet. In theory, being able to easily check movie quotes online should have made things better, but errors embed themselves in the cultural psyche faster than ever.

We Miss You, Charlie

On November 3rd, Charlie Arenson passed away at home surrounded by his wife, Lu, and their four adult children, Jourdan, Claudia, Paul and Bret after a brief illness.

Charlie and Lu moved to Sausalito after losing their home in the Oakland fire. They were drawn to the Village concept and became involved early on, and we are so very lucky they did. Charlie served on the Board of Directors and after retiring a few years ago, joined the Advisory Board. Charlie's warm smiles, comforting words and great bear hugs will be sorely missed! We were lucky enough to have both Charlie and Lu join us at the going away party for Stella and Fred in August.

Please take a moment to write your condolences on this special Kudoboard CLICK HERE They will be shared with Charlie's wife and children.

We miss you Charlie!

(Note earlier time to accomodate our East Coast speaker)

Featuring Jo Haraf
Marriage, Murder, & Betrayal
In Nineteenth Century California

Left for dead on Monterey's beach in 1832, Scotsman James Black survived to build a Marin county cattle and dairy empire. His privileged life ended in addiction after his wife's death at the hand of their son-in-law.

After his death Black's daughter fought her stepmother for four years and across two counties for a fair portion of her father's $15 million dollar estate.

Join the Black family and their contemporaries as California evolves from a sea-otter-hunting Spanish colony to a Mexican territory beset by invading Russians and finally into an American state where wealth and influence come to those who embrace the new west's opportunities and risks.

A past volunteer at the Marin History Museum, Jo Haraf edited and contributed to MHM's book Journal Across the Plains, the Museum's Newsletter and the Bulletin. After twenty-five years in Marin, she now lives on Florida's Sun Coast with her husband and a scruffy terrier whose adoration sustained her through revisions and rejections.

Don't miss the longest partial lunar eclipse of

SubscribePast IssuesTranslate ▼RSS

The longest partial lunar eclipse of the century is due to take place next week between Nov. 18 and 19, and the gorgeous phenomenon will be visible in all 50 U.S. states.

NASA forecasts that the almost-total eclipse of the Micro Beaver Full Moon will last around 3 hours, 28 minutes and 23 seconds — beginning at approximately 2:19 a.m. EST (7:19 a.m. UTC); reaching its maximum around 4 a.m. EST (9 a.m. UTC); and ending at 5:47 a.m. EST (10:47 a.m. UTC). The Micro Beaver moon is so named because it occurs when the moon is at the farthest point from Earth and in the lead-up to beaver-trapping season.

The partial lunar eclipse, when Earth's shadow covers 97% of the full moon, will be the longest of the century by far, dwarfing the duration of the longest total lunar eclipse this century, which took place in 2018 and stretched to 1 hour and 43 minutes. The forthcoming eclipse will also be the longest partial lunar eclipse in 580 years, according to the Holcomb Observatory at Butler University, Indiana.

Monarch Butterfly Population Sees Thousand-Fold Increase, Likely Thanks to Drought

A silver lining of the drought may be that the monarch butterflies are exploding back after a near-extinction event last year, with one central California beach recording a 3,500% increase in the winged critters.

The great annual monarch butterfly migration is on, and far larger numbers of the little black-and-orange winged beauties are being observed all over North America this autumn. In Texas, the "monarch highway" of Interstate 35 is fluttering with tens and thousands of the majestic insects. Mexico's Rio Grande Valley was crawling with

The Seven Summits

The Seven Summits are the highest mountain peaks of each of the seven continents. From the rarified air of the Himalayas to the plains of Africa and polar glaciers of Antarctica, the Seven Summits form a collection of selected peaks stretching to the far reaches of the globe. So far, only 350 people in the world have summited the seven peaks. The Bass list, named after the American climber Dick Bass who completed the summits in April 1985, forms the most accurate list of the summits. The Bass Seven Summits are Asia's Everest (8,848 m), South America's Aconcagua (6,961 m), North America's Denali (6,194 m), Africa's Kilimanjaro (5,895 m), Europe's Elbrus (5,642 m), Antarctica's Vinson (4,892 m), and Australia's Kosciuszko (2,228 m).
