Expect the Unexpected

In a recent New York Times column, entitled "How we're holding it together," Melissa Kirsch writes that "these past few weeks, we've been reminded (again) ... that there's no straight path from not-normal to normal. It's twisty, pocked with potholes, drawn out by detours, roadwork ahead."

For Kirsch the arrival of the new Covid variant Omicron has meant shelving a long-anticipated trip, postponing a holiday family gathering, and "un-laying" other well-laid plans. She writes that reading these lines by the ancient Roman poet Horace is one activity that has helped her to "hold it together" in the face of these disruptions.

Always expect reversals; be hopeful in trouble,
Be worried when things go well. That's how it is
For the man whose heart is ready for anything.
It's true that Jupiter brings on the hard winters;
It's also true that Jupiter takes them away.

Apollo isn't always drawing his bow;
There are times when he takes up his lyre and plays,
And awakens the music sleeping upon the strings.

This young man is a relative of one of our readers. He plays all of the instruments and created the animation too!

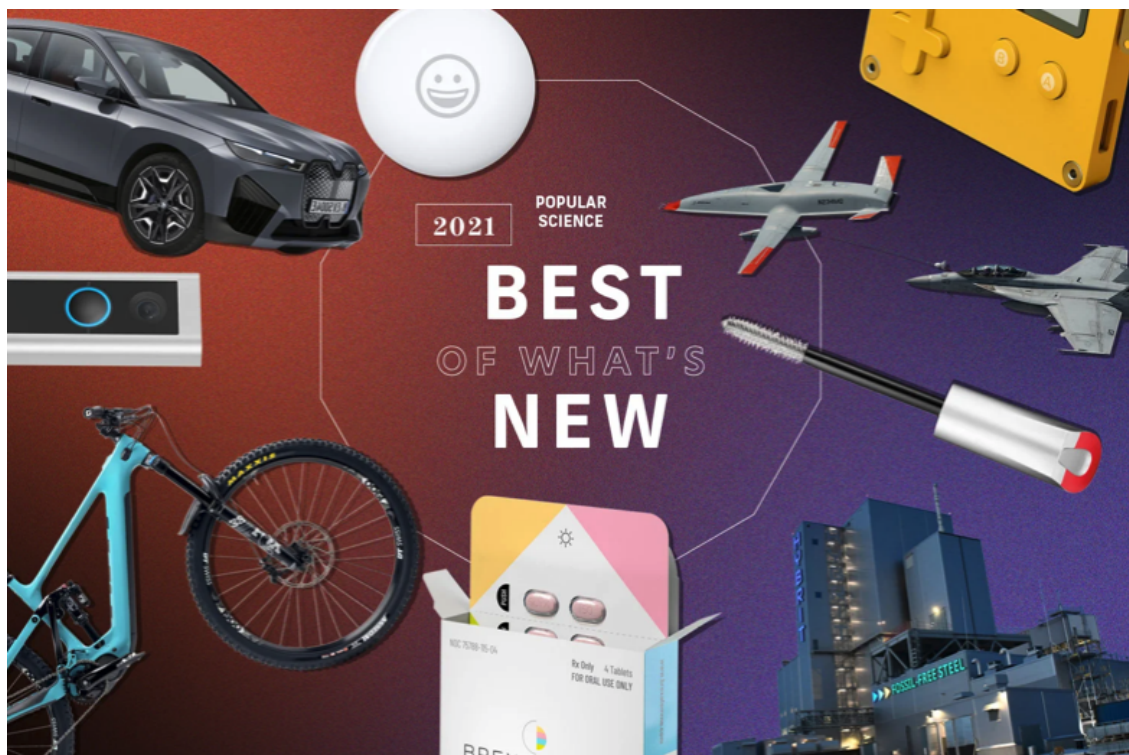

The best books of 2021: These 17 titles received four-star reviews from USA TODAY critics

A convent full of witchy, medieval nuns. A haunted Minneapolis bookstore. A romance between two enslaved Black men. A cult preparing for the apocalypse. They've little in common, except they're all subjects of some of this year's best books.

While we've got plenty of gripes with 2021, one thing the past year got indisputably right is books. The year delivered an embarrassment of literary riches: Jonathan Franzen returned to form with a Midwestern opus for the ages; Irish phenom Sally Rooney continued her hot streak with her best novel yet; Humorist Jenny Lawson mined her mental health for much-needed laughs and insight; and master of the form Joan Didion even released a freshly gathered collection of word-perfect essays.

They are among the 17 books USA TODAY critics gave perfect ★★★★★ (out of four) reviews. Here's the complete list of this year's best reads. CLICK HERE to read the article

The 100 greatest innovations of 2021

From Popular Science Magazine online

Never in recent history has the world been so engrossed by the most mundane stages of the scientific process. But for the last two years, each incremental step in science—from lab research to understand the evolution of COVID-19 and develop a vaccine one thing: Hope.

Popular Science chose the top innovations in 10 categories of science: Health, Gadgets, Auto, Personal Care, Aerospace, Engineering, Entertainment, Home, Security and Sports/Outdoors.

Stretch & Strengthen with Rayner

Have you enjoyed a Stretch and Strengthen Class with Rayner on Zoom or Youtube?

If you have enjoyed one of the classes posted every week in this newsletter or taken the class 'live' on zoom on Monday mornings, please take a moment to give thanks to the two people who make it possible.

Rayner Needleman has been teaching for Sausalito Village for 10 years, as a volunteer dedicated to keeping us moving and fit. During the pandemic, Sharon Seymour volunteered to get the class going on Zoom and keep it going. We have set up Kudoboard for you to provide your thanks. If you have trouble, email your comments to SausalitoVillageRSVP@gmail.com
