Books!

Jacqueline Kudler

I had started reading Richard Power's The Overstory before the shelter-in-place policy came down and very much enjoyed sinking into it through the first weeks of our new reality. I think it's a fine book to read as we try to maintain our sanity through these unsettling days. Around 500 pages long and beautifully written, its complexity demands a fairly intense focus – just what I needed to while away the long hours at home. The lives of nine vividly drawn separate characters, eventually coming together as the book unfolds making for the novel's complexity. As do the lives of the trees that surround these people – “characters” which summon forth some of Power's most lyrical passages. This is not just a book for tree-huggers though, the book ended up re-reading it through a second time with great pleasure—can't think of a better way of recommending it. Jacqueline Kudler

Jacqueline Kudler is a poet who lives in Sausalito. One of the founders of Sixteen River Press, her collections of poetry include The Sacred Precinct and Easing Into Dark.
