Volunteers organized by Sausalito Village are delivering flyers to every residence this weekend as part of a project to reach everyone in town with important information from the City of Sausalito. The flyers have contact numbers for emotional and mental health organizations and hotlines.

What becoming a widow taught me about living through this

Life as I knew it ended when my husband died — 40 years after we married while still in college. For the first time in my life, I joined the category of people living alone — larger now than at any time in our history. I struggled to begin a new life without him. And somehow I figured it out.

Now, in these difficult days, my life has been completely upended a second time and I'm trying to figure it out once again. While I hold onto the hope that this time it's a pause and not an end, I'm discovering the acute difference between being alone and aching lonely. And I'm experiencing again the stages of grief.

Follow From Home the Supreme Court's First Livestream Arguments

For the first time in history, people outside the U.S. Supreme Court's walls will be able to hear arguments as they happen. It may not be baseball, but plenty of court watchers and casual fans alike are excited for the action.

The institution rejects cameras in the courtroom or even same-day audio, but the coronavirus threw it a curveball and now the justices are livestreaming 10 arguments over the next two weeks, with that audio carried to the public by C-Span and other networks.

Detailed below are those controversies to be considered by the nine justices over six dates, beginning May 4 and wrapping up on May 13. They'll be phoned in by counsel as the court abides social distancing requirements necessitated by the pandemic.

 Roller-skating cheetahs, vacationing cephalopods, star-gazing gazelles—this collection of coloring-pages is unmistakably the work of Academy friend (and regular NightLife artist) Nigel Sussman. So grab your artistic implements of choice because the night belongs to Claude, the news belongs to lobsters, and those sheltering-in-place doldrums can take a kiwi-laden plane to nowhere. Find more
