The hotel bar is neither here nor there, and I mean that as a compliment. Unlike the dive, its highest purpose isn't to feel rooted to a place — to be so indispensable that it acts as a museum to its patrons' collective memory. Unlike the modern craft cocktail bar, its mission is not to reflect a drinking culture that keeps up with Instagram. And unlike the wine bar, or beer bar, or sports bar, it doesn't pledge allegiance to any one drink or pastime. In a hotel bar, nobody cares if you're a Packers fan or a freak for orange wine from Slovenia. The best hotel bars aren't about the here or now; they are grander and more enduring than the present.
