Put The Brakes On People Pleasing

How often did you say "no" this week? I know just by looking at the long list of to-dos scribbled in my planner that I didn't say "no" all that much. It's easy to write that off as a temporary busy work week. But I know that something deeper is at play: my tendency to please people.

What If Preventing Collapse Isn't Profitable?

The notion that modern industrial civilization is fundamentally unsustainable and is therefore likely to collapse at some point is not a new one. Even before the Limits to Growth report of 1972, many ecologists were concerned that our continual expansion of population and consumption, based on the ever-increasing rate at which we burn finite supplies of fossil fuels, would eventually lead to crises of resource depletion and pollution (including climate change) as well as catastrophic loss of wild nature. Dystopian outcomes would inevitably follow.
